1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to free flowing aqueous cleaning compositions and, more specifically, to the use of terpene oleates in free flowing non-aqueous compositions. 2. Brief Description of the Prior Art In the cleaning of various substrates, such as carpets, it is sometimes necessary to apply a great amount of material to the substrate. This is commonly accomplished by vacuum systems which extract the material from a material carrying chamber and deposit it on the substrate. It is also sometimes desirable to apply a thick coating of material so that the material acts as a cushion or barrier to the passage of dirt particles or to the water of cleaning solutions from the substrate. Many liquids do not function well in this context because the coating material tends to sink to the bottom of the container. The introduction of air into the container tends to move the coating material to the top. The result is a coating which is too thick or which floats on the surface of the material. In either case, the coating does not adhere well to the substrate. It has been found that terpene esters are very effective as thickening agents. These esters tend to be spread in a free flowing liquid system. It has also been found that these esters are very effective as cushioning materials and as subbing layers to be applied prior to the application of the cleaning material.

THREAD 1: HE YELLED OUT 'SLOPPY JOE' TO DESCRIBE THIS WOMAN On Feb. 12, two women were taking shelter from a storm at a rest stop in Dickson, Tennessee, when they were approached by a man with a knife. The woman, whom The Daily Mail calls "Yvette," asked the man to leave her alone. He refused and instead followed her around the rest stop
